. . . maybe this is the place to tell you that we've got a lot of pleasures of a kind here: we like the sun comin' up over the mountain in the morning, and we all notice a good deal about the birds. We pay a lot of attention to them, and trees and plants. And we watch the change of the seasons: yes, everybody knows about them . . . We'll go back to the town now. It's middle of the afternoon. All . . . have had their dinners, and all the dishes have been washed. There's an early-afternoon calm in our town: a buzzin' and a hummin' from the school buildings . . .

Most Everybody's asleep . . . There are a few lights on. Shorty . . . down at the depot, has just watched the . . . train go by . . . Yes, it's clearing up. There are the stars—doing their old crisscross journeys in the sky. Scholars haven't settled the matter yet, but they seem to think there are no living beings up here. They're just chalk . . . or fire. Only this one is straining away, straining away all the time to make something of itself. The strain's so bad that every sixteen hours everybody lies down and gets a rest. Hm . . . Eleven o'clock . . . You get a good rest, too. Goodnight . . .

Thornton Wilder (Our Town)
